Dr. Andrew Wakefield, MB, BS, FRCS, FRCPath, is an academic gastroenterologist. He received his medical degree from St. Mary's Hospital Medical School (part of the University of London) in 1981, one of the third generation of his family to have studied medicine at that teaching hospital.

He pursued a career in gastrointestinal surgery with a particular interest in inflammatory bowel disease. In the 1990s, Dr. Wakefield saw a consistent pattern of mothers bringing their children to his clinic all with the same story. He investigated and then in 1998 published one of 130 original scientific articles, book chapters, and invited scientific commentaries that he has published, in the Lancet Journal of Medicine, questioning the safety of the MMR vaccine and its possible link to the rise in autism.

Almost immediately, he and this work, conducted with 12 other medical professionals, was defamed in the media by Government agencies and the Drug Industries.

In 2001, he left his position at the Royal Free. In 2005, he founded The Thoughtful House in Austin, TX, today's The Johnson Center for Child Health & Development. In January 2010, his British Medical Registry is revoked. In February, the Lancet retracted his 1998 study. Dr. Wakefield stands by his work to this day.
